

More women have joined the migration stream. They are migrating independently. Global statistics confirms that, over 49 percent women are on the move. Because of the role women play in our society, they are seen doing all kinds of work to ensure adequate food in their households. Women combines their work with their reproductive and domestic roles. The other reason is that, due to social change, caring for the household is no longer the sole responsibility of the men. Women are now expected to contribute to the upkeep of the household. Another element of social change is the high economic demands on the family. These new trends have forced women not to stay home but rather perform some economic activities – in this migration, that help them earn some income
